How Undergraduate Student Parents Make Decisions About Course-Taking, Majors, Jobs, and Careers

Light Refreshments Provided

Tuesday, November 5 2019 • 10:00am
The Wisconsin Idea room (Education Building #159)

Each week, student parents must balance work, college classes, and kids that requires a level of skill and strategy to be successful. This mixed-methods study highlights the experiences of student parents as they persist and navigate an urban community college in Southern California.

Adrian H. Huerta, PhD is an assistant professor in the Pullias Center for Higher Education located in the Rossier School of Education at the University of Southern California. Dr. Huerta's research focuses on boys and men of color; college access and equity; and gang-associated youth in the K-16 educational pipeline.

The Center for Research on College-Workforce Transitions (CCWT) is an initiative of the Wisconsin Center for Education Research (WCER). CCWT's mission is to conduct and support research, critical policy analysis, and public dialogue on how college students experience the transition to the workforce. CCWT strives to inform policies, programs, and practices that promote academic and career success for all learners.
