Living Hmong Studies, building the field: Dr. Mai See Thao on Hmong refugee experiences and growing Hmong Studies

Monday, August 24, 2020, 1pm CST (US)

In this webinar, student researchers from the Our HMoob American College Paj Ntaub research study will interview Dr. Mai See Thao, who is joining the University of Wisconsin-Oshkosh this fall as the Director of the newly created Hmong Studies program and as Assistant Professor of Anthropology, Global Religions, and Cultures. In addition to discussing her vision of Hmong Studies at UW-Oshkosh and her community-based research with Hmong, Dr. Thao will also discuss her personal experiences as a former Hmong American UW-Madison undergraduate student and her path to becoming a Hmong academic.

Mai See Thao is a trained medical anthropologist with research interests in historical trauma, displacement, the refugee body, biopolitics, care (long-term care and chronic disease management), and community-based participatory research. She is also the new Director of Hmong Studies and Assistant Professor in the Department of Anthropology, Global Religions, and Cultures at the University of Wisconsin-Oshkosh.
