

Data Equity and Why it is Important to Southeast Asian Americans

Friday, April 8, 2022, 1:00-2:00pm CST., Wisconsin Idea Room
School of Education, 1000 Bascom Mall

KaYing Yang will share her journey through a three-decade long career in public policy and community service for Southeast and Asian Americans. Her talk will highlight the importance of data equity, its implications for policy and institutional leaders when making accurate and equitable decisions that best benefit impacted communities.

KAYING YANG

For more than two decades, KaYing has been a social justice advocate who has built and led community organizing, public policy engagement, and development efforts locally, nationally, and globally. She is a member of the Biden/Harris Administration, President's Advisory Commission for the White House Initiative on Asian Americans, Native Hawaiians and Pacific Islanders; President of RedGreen Rivers; a board member of Women Winning; and a 2019 recipient of the Bush Foundation Fellowship.

The Center for Research on College-Workforce Transitions (CCWT) is an initiative at the University of Wisconsin-Madison. CCWT's mission is to conduct and support research, critical policy analysis, and public dialogue on how college students experience the transition to the workforce. CCWT strives to inform policies, programs, and practices that promote academic and career success for all learners.
